Channing Folsom, Famous Educator

BY DR. WILLIAM MANDREY

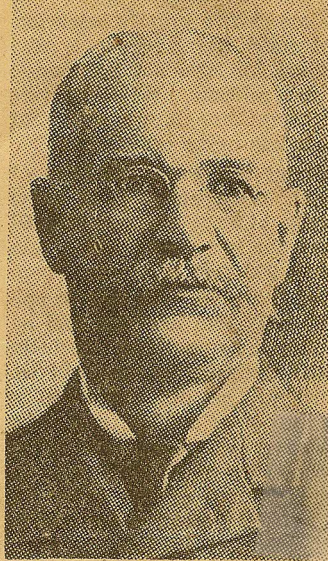

IN FEBRUARY 1937 an honored citizen of Newmarket, aged 89, died in the old family home in which he was born. He was Channing Folsom, a man who had devoted his life to the cause of education; a leader whose untiring efforts resulted in the creation of a richer and better school program for the children of the state. As superintendent of public instruction from 1898 to 1904 he diligently labored to raise New Hampshire's educational standards. In this struggle he fought against apathy, indifference and strongly entrenched private interests.

* * *

THE FOLSOMS were among the first to settle in the state. Because of the active part played by several of its members the family was well known for its leadership. Channing's father, a country doctor, wanted his son to have an excellent education. From his meager savings he sent him to Phillips Exeter and then to Dartmouth. But the funds were insufficient and the young scholar was seriously handicapped by poor vision. As a result, the plans for college had to be abandoned. Channing decided to be a teacher and for the next three years he taught in Massachusetts, returning to his native state after receiving a position in Portsmouth. Then came a call from Dover to become the principal of the Belknap school. Meanwhile the trustees of the Elliot school in Boston heard of the success of the young schoolmaster and made him an attractive offer which was accepted. For the next five years he served as a master at that famous school.

* * *

MR. FOLSOM ENJOYED his work at Boston and in all probability he would have remained at the Elliot school if the superintendent of schools at Dover had not resigned. The school board remembered the excellent work Channing Folsom had done as principal of the Belknap school and asked him to return to accept the position of superintendent. Folsom accepted and for the next 16 years he ably directed the school program at Dover. The years from 1882 to 1898 witnessed many decided changes in both policies and methods and under the capable supervision of Superintendent Folsom the public schools of Dover made noteworthy progress.

* * *

IN 1898 FRED GOWING resigned his post as superintendent of public instruction. After interviewing several outstanding candidates the members of the state Board of Education were convinced that they could find no educator who possessed better qualifications than the superintendent at Dover. Channing Folsom accepted their offer and with the same patient, persistent effort and sound judgment which characterized his administration at Dover he began at once the task of raising the educational standards of the state.

* * *

A NATIVE WHO THOROUGHLY UNDERSTOOD popular wishes, he first attempted to arouse the interest of the people. He realized that many communities could not support the kind of schools they wanted because of their limited resources. He advocated state aid to these communities. He drafted the so-called "Grange School Law" which called for an annual appropriation by the state of $25,000 for needy districts. His impartial and fair distribution of the funds won the support of those leaders who fought the proposal. He then labored to secure a better system of supervision of instruction in the poorer school districts and set achievement standards which high schools must meet to merit approval.

* * *

MR. FOLSOM was no "faddist"; he was a practical school man who insisted upon a mastery of the fundamentals. Realizing that tuition rates and the narrow limits of the curriculum deprived many students of a high school education, he launched a vigorous campaign to eliminate tuition and advocated courses in business and industrial education. He fought for the enforcement of attendance laws, prosecuted callous employers who defied the child labor laws and encouraged the establishment of evening classes where young and old could learn after working hours. For six years Channing Folsom labored vigorously and tirelessly to raise the educational standards of the state. It was a gallant crusade which laid a firm foundation upon which others could build. His courage and zeal did much to develop a splendid system of state education.

Kenneth Furbush

LEE — Kenneth W. Furbush, 73, died July 12, 2006, at his home, after a long period of failing health.

He was born in Farmington on April 15, 1933, the son of Ralph M. Furbush and Irene H. (Wentworth) Furbush White.

He attended Farmington schools and joined the U.S. Army in 1950. He served in Korea in 1950-1951 with the 2nd Div. (Second to None) 8th Infantry. He survived the

KENNETH FURBUSH
Business owner

Chosen Reservoir and was declared missing in action while a prisoner of war. He and three others managed to escape the prison camp. He also served in Germany in 1953 during the occupation. After his discharge from the Army, he graduated from Wentworth Institute of Technology in Diesel Engineering. He also served in the Army Reserves in the 1960's as Master Sgt.

He worked as a diesel mechanic at Ipswich Power Plant in Ipswich, Mass. and as a welder at General Electric-Riverworks in Lynn, Mass. In 1958, he returned to Farmington, where he owned and operated a Sunoco Station, served as a special police officer and also owned and operated K.W. Furbush & Sons, doing truck & auto repairs, as well as welding and fabricating. He also operated independent construction trucks for Watkins, Midway & Audley Construction Companies.

As a young man he enjoyed hunting, fishing, swimming and camping with his family. He enjoyed learning the history of trains and took many photos of them. He became quite skilled as a self-taught photographer. While his health allowed, he was a model railroad.

In 1977, he moved to Lee and mini-farmed as a hobby while working as a welder foreman at Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Shop 26, until forced into retirement due to an injury in 1985. After several years of surgery and therapy, he tried to resume lighter work, working at Ken Smith tractor, but his old injury and new health issues forced him to fully retire.

He is survived by his wife of 52 years, Marie Irene (Boudreau) Furbush of Lee; his children: Kathryn and her husband, Vernon Plummer, of Laconia, Michael Furbush of Colebrook, John Furbush of Lebanon, Maine; his daughter-in-law, Sandra Furbush of Annapolis, Md.; his grandchildren, Holly N. Wynn of Corsicana, Texas, Cheryle L. Simmons of Lumberton, Texas, David J. Furbush of Alton, Erin E. Plummer of Laconia, Amy L. Furbush of Portland, Maine, and Andrew J. Furbush of Annapolis; eight great-grandchildren, Brian, Brina, Zachary, and Noah, all of Corsicana, Bethanie and Katelynn Nicole of Lumberton, Kaitlynn Ann and Katrina Rose, both of Alton; his siblings, Marjorie M. Dunbar of Farmington, Ralph M. Furbush of Kensington, Marilyn Bishop of Salisbury, Mass., Shirley Merrill of Seabrook, Melvin Furbush of Newberry, Donna Bishop, Donald Furbush and Carole Stanwood, all of Salisbury, and Ronald E. White of Clarksville, Tenn.; many nieces and nephews.

He was predeceased by his parents, and brothers, Jack A. Furbush Sr. and Burton E. White Jr.

Visiting hours will be held on Friday, July 14 from 7-9 p.m. at the Kent & Pelczar Funeral Home, 77 Exeter St., in Newmarket.
